Come meet participating faculty and students and hear about upcoming events and new courses including a studio course that will travel to Mexico City in spring 2016.

The Global Urban Humanities Initiative is an interdisciplinary experiment that brings together the design disciplines, the arts and humanities, and the humanistic social sciences to investigate cities.

Faculty and graduate students in anthropology, architecture, art history, city planning, comp. literature, geography, history, landscape architecture, performance studies, public health, rhetoric, and many other departments come together to find new approaches to understanding urban form and experience. Refreshments will be served!
